JUN.

See 13,844.

Intercalary; extra.

閏月 an intercalary moon,—a thirteenth moon inserted seven times in nineteen years, in order to make up the annual deficiency of the lunar year as compared with the solar year. This moon is now inserted in such a manner that the winter solstice will always fall in the 11th moon, the summer solstice in the 5th, the vernal equinox in the 2nd, and the autumnal equinox in the 8th. Also, that it shall cover a period in which the sun does not pass from one sign of the zodiac to another, and that the 1st, 2nd and 12th moons shall never be reduplicated.

以閏月定四時 by means of an intercalary moon, fix the four seasons,—so said the Emperor Yao.

七閏爲一章 seven intercalations make a Metonic cycle of nineteen years.

磨²

7974

如蟻旋磨 like an ant going round on a mill-stone,—although it may walk in an opposite direction to that in which the millstone turns, yet, because of its own slower speed, it actually goes round the same way as the stone. Thus, it has been said that the sun and moon themselves really travel eastwards, but carried round by the superior velocity of the celestial sphere they are forced in a westerly direction. See 5459.

磨盤揖 to bow to a circle or line of persons collectively.

磨不開 cannot rub it off; cannot do it successfully; can't manage it; to feel ashamed.

臉上磨不開 couldn't conceal his shame.
